- Are you interested in seeing greater equality and respect in labor agreements, the law, government and legal contracts?
- Would you like to see corporate money out of politics?
- Does it seem to you that either the profit motive or government control is disrupting a true and proper functioning of our health care system, scientific research, education and the arts?
- Does it seem wrong to you that our commonly held resources should be exploited for private gain?
- Would you like to see a more altruistic approach to our economy, giving proper care for those who supply goods and services?
- Do you agree that each human being should have the opportunity and support to develop their positive, innate talents and capacities?
- Do you recognize that people need to be able to have their work life based on their free initiative, so long as what they do has no negative effects on society at large?

If these questions interest you, then please come to this play and the discussion to follow. This War is Not Inevitable is a drama that depicts Dr. Rudolf Steiner's efforts to share his insights about the threefold nature of social life at a time of devastation in Europe at the end of World War I. Steiner observed that social life has three distinct spheres, cultural/spiritual, rights/political, and economic, which have their own structures, qualities, and ideals. In his view, these should function in a separate but cooperative manner in order for human social life to unfold in a harmonious, sustainable, and life-supporting way.

"Michael Burton's play This War is Not Inevitable is a rare combination of artistic accomplishment, engaging history and relevance to the ... burning issues of the present time."
(Dr. William Riggins, author and audience member)
